

What sort of computer will I need for Linux?

This question has a lot of answers. The bottom line is: depending upon what you want to do with Linux, the system requirements can range from an old Intel 386 to a state of the art PC.

This section of the chapter will go through all the major parts of hardware attached to a typical computer and detail what is expected to run a typical modern Linux desktop, starting first, with the CPU.